SDSU Bachelor's Cohort Begins New Course with Dr. Lally

The San Diego State University (SDSU) Program introduced a new course, RWS 305W which provides strategies to understand the function of reading and writing in a wide range of situations. Moreover, the course will enhance students' abilities to develop writing processes that reflect creation, revision and editing skills. The course will also enhance student critical reading and writing skills through various assigned work and group projects. Course topics covers Rhetorical Knowledge, Critical Thinking, Writing Processes, Knowledge of Conventions, and Attitudes, Values, and Preparation for Life Beyond the University.

The required course learning objectives are 1) students' are expected to respond effectively in writing issues and arguments as presented, 2) Identify practical theory, analyze details, and apply relevant solutions, 3) Analyze different writing text such as tone, evidence, patterns, and even visual, and 4) Understand the concept of rhetorical situations such as relationship among writer, audience, subject, and the context.

Students' of SDSU Bachelor's cohort are currently on their 9th course with nine more courses to complete the program in May 2021.
