Classes Adjusted in Response to COVID-19

Like the rest of Palau, Palau Community College has been affected by the coronavirus pandemic. When the public and private schools closed to enforce social distancing practices, this left the college to make a decision too. To close or to remain open? Being an institution of higher education, the college was free to decide. For faculty, the answer was simple. Continue the semester for students to be able to earn their credits and stay on track for graduation. With that in mind, classes were discontinued for one week to allow faculty to prepare for a new way of teaching and helping students to learn.

Faculty spent that week not on break like the students but on preparing their classes to be delivered in a variety of modes. Some chose to use the correspondence method by emailing assignments, readings and lectures to their students, others chose to turn their classes into fully online ones using the Moodle LMS while a few remained teaching face-to face since their class size was very small. Some are using Google classroom or Zoom to still be able to lecture and answer questions posed by their students in live time.

After the one week closure, students came back the following Monday and Tuesday for a short orientation for students to understand the changes that were made to their classes and to make their Moodle accounts if necessary. Social distance was practiced with students meeting their instructors in small groups for instruction on how the remaining five weeks would proceed and meeting in the On-line Computer lab in small Moodle orientation groups.

PCC CRE and Melekeok PAN Donate to Dormitory Students

PCC Dormitory Students participating in tree planting activity in observance of Earth Day 2020

On Friday, April 24, 2020, PCC-Cooperative Research and Extension (CRE) and Melkeok Protected Areas Network (PAN) donated various types of plants and trees including lemon, breadfruit, soursop, avocado and terminalia catappa also known as miich to PCC dorm. With this, PCC dormitory students joined with the rest of the world in observance of Earth Day and engaged in a tree-planting activity to promote and demonstrate support in environmental protection and agricultural advancements for the institution as well as Palau. Great job and thank you PCC Dorm students.

Since Charter Day and Spring Break were not observed, there was no need extend the semester additional days.

These changes have led students to adapt to the new course styles. With no set time for their courses, learning to prioritize and organize assignments and manage their time wisely has been a challenging learning process. Adjustments have been made along the way as needed by faculty, such as extending deadlines, removing smaller assignment requirements and allowing students to submit hard copies of assignments when lack of Internet or electronic devices became a problem. Tutoring centers, the Library, and the Online Computer Lab remain open for students to support student needs with all practicing MOH's guidelines for social distancing and cleaning. All in all, the spring 2020 semester is winding down not as a traditional semester does, but still with student success utmost in the minds of all.
